Organised by the NUS Yong Loo Lin School of Medicine, Division of Graduate Medical Studies and the National University Hospital Patient Relations Department, this one-day course seeks to refresh and update healthcare professionals with a current understanding of medical law and statutes. These involve ethical and legal considerations affecting clinical care practices in a developing litigious landscape.

The primary outcome of this course is to achieve higher-order critical thinking skills (thought leadership) towards enhanced risk management capabilities of healthcare professionals.

BENEFITS OF ATTENDING

- Gain an in-depth appreciation of the medicolegal climate in Singapore
- Inculcate the importance of good clinical practices and avoid potential pitfalls or unnecessary complaints/litigations
- Equip healthcare professionals with the necessary knowledge, critical thinking skills and enhanced risk management capabilities to perform well; productively and effectively
- Senior healthcare professionals will be well positioned to respond to higher societal expectations and bring quality care to patients

WHO SHOULD ATTEND

Hospital specialists and generalists, primary care physicians in polyclinics, general practitioners, clinical pharmacists and registered nurses.

*CME/CPE points will be awarded to doctors and nurses

What our Past Participants say about this course

"A useful course that all clinicians should take. From the course, I am more aware of potential pitfalls and what I can do to better protect myself and my patients."

- Dr Jinnie Pang, KKH

"The course brought life to medicolegal and ethical principles by incorporating an excellent range of examples over the past two decades from local and overseas cases. The speakers' rich personal experiences also gave a valuable first-hand slant to the teaching materials."

- Dr Adrian Loh, MINDEF
